C A U C A CULTIVATES PEACE

PRODUCTIVE PROJECTS OF THE SIGNERS TO THE PEACE AND COMMUNITIES STORIES OF HOPE AND GREATNESS.

2021
In early November 2020 in Bogotá, Plaza de Bolívar, the outcomes of the of the peace process in Cauca and in Colombia were highlighted in a day of peaceful demonstration to protest the murder of ex-combatants and the absence of guarantees for comprehensive reintegration.

Four years after the signing of the Final Peace Agreement, the signatories do not have land for their projects, and 252 ex-FARC members have been killed as of January 7th, 2021*. Manuel Villegas, who we met during the making of this brochure, was murdered on December 27th in Miranda.

The fruits of the productive projects of the peace signatories were evidence of the commitments of the men and women that laid down their arms and journeyed from the territories to the capital, to raise a rallying cry: “For life and for peace!”.

This was the title of their pilgrimage, during which two thousand ex-combatants walked solemnly with white flags to the centre of the country. Along with their backpacks, they brought dolls, beers, and coffee.

Their bags were no longer full of rifles and weapons, but with crops and manufactured goods that, with some effort, they grow and manufacture from the Territorial Spaces for Training and Reincorporation (ETCR) and the New Areas of Reincorporation (NAR).

Apart from the murder of reintegrated individuals, social leaders, indigenous people and defenders of the Peace Agreement, as well the damage to the environment, and the voluntary replacement of illegal crops – young people, Afro-Colombians, and women are being murdered across the country in a wave of violence, massacres and murders that are an attack on human dignity and form an unprecedented tragedy in Colombia.

During this time, where the threats are increasing, as are the number burials and the death count, hope is held by those who have laid down their arms and now wield hoes and sewing machines. Even with such difficulties, failures and challenges, the productive projects that are presented below show a firm and determined commitment to seek a future of peace and well-being, in an area that is still living the cruelties of war.
“Cauca is the department with the highest risk for reintegrated individuals”, expresses Jhon Moreno (Antonio Pardo), one of the leaders of the reintegration process of the FARC in southwest Colombia. This is evident; on November 6th an indigenous signatory, Hernando Ramos Menza (Fredy Ramos) was murdered, a few metres from the ETCR of Los Monos, in the municipality of Caldono.

Cauca is currently home to some 1,274 peace signatories, 248 of which reside in 4 AETCRs; three in the Northeast, in the municipalities of Buenavista (El Ceral), Caldono (los Monos) y Miranda (Monterredondo), and one in the Southwest, in the jurisdiction of Patía (El Estrecho).

The remaining 1,026 peace signatories are spread across various areas, particularly in the 11 New Areas of Reincorporation (NAR) in the municipalities of Toribío, Corinto, Caloto, Santander de Quilichao, Argelia, Tambo, Miranda, Guapi, Caldono, Inzá and unmistakably, in Popayán, the capital of the department. “That few people live in the ETCRs and that 11 NARs have been created shows the progress and the consolidation of territorial peace in Cauca. The fact that the reintegrated peoples have returned to their villages, their families and their friendships, is a victory as it ensures the strengthening of relations with local communities,” emphasises Antonio Pardo about this process.

With the murder of Ramos, a total of 39 peace signatories have been murdered in Cauca, giving the department the sad record of the place with the highest number of these incidents (16% of the national total).

According to CINEP, the Centre for Research and Popular Education, the violation of human rights, transgressions of International Humanitarian Law, and political violence also occur primarily in Cauca (Noche y Niebla, 2019).

The efforts of the peace signatories to address the violence – which, in 2020, claimed the lives of at least 107 social leaders in Cauca – no longer involve arms. Associated in five cooperatives, the fruits of the peace effort in Cauca are take the form of avocados, fish, pigs, coffee, cattle, lemons, handicrafts, hens, furniture and even cloth dolls.

In this brochure we present the projects carried out by the following cooperatives:

- The Santa Clara Ecomún multi-active Agroforestry Cooperative (CEMAS),
- The Forging Paths to Peace Cooperative (COOPSENDAPAZ),
- the La Esperanza Ecomún Cooperative (CECOESPE),
- The People’s Hope Ecomún Multi-Active Cooperative (COMEEP),
- the Corporation for the Promotion of Territorial Development (CEPRODET),

10 other associated bodies registered by the National Reincorporation Agency (ARN) welcome different projects that the peace signatories are advancing in the department. According to the Agency, as of October 2020, the number of registered productive projects was 46, giving a total value of 6,298 million pesos for the benefit of 614 peace signatories and their families.

Six of the initiatives are communal and are developed out in areas such as porciculture, cattle ranching/livestock, fish farming, and the farming of Hass avocados and Tahiti Limes. The 40 individual projects are in the economic sectors of agriculture, livestock, hunting, forestry, fishing, wholesale and retail trade, manufacturing industries, construction, and other services (activities).

On their part, the collective of peace signatories have advanced eight collective projects which have received a great deal of support. In other words, a total of 14 collective projects are carried out in Cauca, 56% of which are self-managed by FARC, while the remaining 44% are carried out by the national government within the framework of the Agreement and the one-time allocation of 8 million pesos for every man and woman that has laid down their arms. Furthermore, according to data from the ARN, 22% of the budget of six collective projects does not come from the government.
The ideas and desire for peace are abundant in a territory that has welcomed a process that has not been easy for anyone with solidarity and generosity. Many of the productive areas have been loaned by the communities. Other grounds have been purchased, leased, until the results of the management and will of different associations of farmers and indigenous peoples.

Thus, with the commitment of both the inhabitants of these regions and the support given by indigenous villages, the UNDP, and partly by the government, progress has been made on the productive projects in Cauca. This brochure, the second in the series Colombia Cultivates Peace, is a source of pride not only for the department, but also for the country and the world. Moreover, this brochure contains a message of hope, commitment to peace, and to all the victims of the country. Added to this is a journey through the biodiversity of Cauca and of the Colombian massif, with its communities weaving their territories with their practices and knowledge. This is an initiative of the Generación Paz Magazine (Peace Generation Magazine) – a collective of journalists, storytellers and citizens dedicated to peace – with the support of the FARC faction of the National Council of Reincorporation (CNR) and the funding and backing from the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) and the Norwegian Embassy.

We hope that this document can be, in addition to a resource to support these projects, a call to Colombian society to support peace and comprehensive reintegration throughout the whole country. It is also a tool for us to convince many more, as a civil society, we are called to unite, to embrace the Agreement, and defend our right to peace. We are the generation for peace!
HERE PEACE IS CULTIVATED
With the support of the UNDP, the UN, the IOM, the WFP, the government and the Miranda Peasant Association, a village productivity project has been advanced, similar to others in fish farming, cattle farming, pig farming and carpentry. The cooperative CEPRODET is in charge of the projects in this municipality.

El Desbaratado, Miranda.

The signers to the peace that live in the Los Samanes farmhouse prepare to organize the 13 cows and the 13 calves that are being reared for the production of beef. They sell milk and, in periods of low sales, they have ventured to produce farmhouse and low-fat cheese, thanks to the partnership with IOM (International Organization for Migration) which has trained them to transform their agricultural products. They have left the habit of waking up before the darkness of dawn fades, but they continue to battle on the daily to live in peace, whilst they cultivate the futures of their families amongst the serene countryside from which Cali can been pictured like a postcard.

Pig farming
El Desbaratado, Miranda.

From the kitchen of the farmhouse their grunts can be heard early on whilst they wait for their succulent breakfast which I leave ready for them before I carry on sleeping. Each reincorporated person’s function is well established and in the early hours they put on their boots before heading out to work the earth by wielding the hoe, and feeding the chickens and chicks that tweet as a part of the countryside’s morning concert. Teamwork and cooperation with the farming folk in the zone has been key to securing productive spaces and ensuring food security for the families.

The farming of tilapia and cachama has been another strong bet for this group of 38 reincorporated. They joined forces and the resources they obtained from the government. They produce together with 18 peasants from the area who contribute to collective work. They are established in the Los Samanes farm and in the Miranda NAR, from where they have tried to generate a territorial stay that is friendly to the environment. Among its care and reforestation actions is the donation of native trees to the municipality for replanting in the Cerro de las Tres Cruces. The path has been one of learning and betting. With the first sowing of 20 thousand fingerlings, they were unaware of key processes and in one of the breeding ponds there was respiratory affection. Despite this, at the end of 2020 they produced between three and five arrobas on fishing days, for a total of approximately one and a half tons over the course of two months.

The love for the countryside and for developing a peaceful life in relation to nature is seen in every vegetable, vegetable and aromatic plant that they grow and that have allowed them to keep the food they require in the kitchen close at hand. Oregano, rosemary, aloe, onion, carrot, lettuce, tomato, coriander, yucca, potato and banana are part of the harvest that is served fresh, from the field to the table. The pandemic has made sales difficult, but thanks to the union that has been forged with the inhabitants of the area, the crops have also served as barter with other typical foods of the area. A tourist opening is also planned.

A peasant leader from Cauca arrived at the ETCR in Monterredondo and seeing the conditions in which the women found themselves decided to join with four other peasant and indigenous victims of the conflict and with three ex-combatants. This is how the Fighting Dolls for Life were born. Each of the 800 that they have made and that have traveled the world represents femininity attacked by war. They represent the peasant women, the Afro, the indigenous, the Chontaduera and the reincorporated, which has a great symbolic value as it is made with camouflaged cloth that belonged to ex-combatants who were murdered after the signing of the peace agreement. The dolls can be obtained at the farianitas store in Popayán, in Bogotá and by order.

Cabinetmaking
Monterredondo, Miranda.

Don Manuel learned to carve wood while paying a prison sentence. Once he regained his freedom, he gathered the resources provided by the Agreement and began to buy the machines he wanted for his cabinetmaking workshop. While we were making this brochure, Manuel was assassinated on December 27. His body was found lifeless in Miranda, a few kilometers from the ETCR where he was reincorporating, manufacturing handicrafts, mirrors, key rings and many more items that today keep the memory of his will for peace. In the midst of mourning, his colleagues demand that they protect their lives and those of all the signatories in the country. Cauca is where the most peace signatories have been assassinated.

COOMEEP is the cooperative that groups more people reintegrated in all the country. The UN, WFP and the indigenous reservations in the area have been key allies in this process. They started with 248 and now there are 437, which translates into almost two thousand people impacted. They already have five of the six planned production projects underway: Hass avocado, tree tomato, trout farming, pig farming and clothing, with support also from the government.

Spinning peace is the name given to this tailoring project of which 11 reincorporated members are part. The project has a gender focus and the administrative positions of the cooperative are equal. Half men and half women who currently earn a salary for their work for the benefit of the community. This project is linked with the others through the making of the uniforms that each program requires; In addition, due to the context of the pandemic, more than 25,000 masks were made in record time that are being donated to communities for protection against the coronavirus pandemic.

Pig farming
Los Monos, Caldono.

Here are 105 ex-combatants working in different parts of the production chain. They have learned to take the whims to the pigs and to have them happy so that they are raised healthy and tasty. They are even carrying out processes to take care of their genetics, so that increasingly higher quality meat is obtained in a location that was previously strategic for the Army and territorial control and is now key for raising pigs. Thus, they have aroused the interest of the municipal administration and are in the process of paving several kilometres of road for the benefit of the community and the productive projects in the area.

This was the pioneer project of the cooperative. They started collecting just over 30 million pesos and even without taking the first fruits, a blizzard and two hailstorms started the crop and stained the tomato. But the will was stronger and they managed not only to get the first harvest, but also to demonstrate their capacity and press for the approval of the other productive projects. Currently 15 ex-combatants are in charge of taking care of the trees, monitoring pests and sowing food sovereignty: among the available space of the crop they plant vegetables, potatoes, cassava, arracacha, corn and beans, from which the families of the cooperative and peasants feed neighbors, who make use of barter to stock up on other products and rotate the blessings that spring from the earth.

Two of COOMEEP’s productive projects are developed in this vast paradise. The avocado trees can be seen to the horizon and sway to the rhythm of the fresh wind that runs through the Cauca, up to the three water reservoirs that the signatories have established for fish farming. They evoke the very difficulties of implementation and the strength to overcome them with the tenacity of men and women seeking social justice and peace, now without weapons and dreaming of ecotourism.

Day by day 59 ex-combatants work on the construction and adaptation of 14 ponds for trout farming, which they hope will multiply to 54 in just two years. To guarantee water, they built three reservoirs; the largest has the capacity to hold up to 25 million liters. The two youngest are also anchored to the desire they have to implement an ecotourism project, so that people can go to the place, go camping or stay in one of the cabins that they will build, bathe in natural water pools that do not affect or to the cultivation or to the normal transit of water sources and to eat fresh fish or pork, from the same cooperative. They have established a fraternal relationship with the communities and in the rest areas they meet to play soccer games, as well as to socialize knowledge, stories and learnings.

Hass avocado
Turbarao, Silvia.

The main program is the cultivation of 25,000 trees of Hass avocado, of which 240 ex-combatants are part. At this time, they have 122 hectares planted and it is projected to increase them to 500 by 2022. The height becomes perfect so that from the earth it sprouts, with the due time, the creamiest avocado in the region. Already have multiple proposals for the sale of the fruit and find in the adequacy of an irrigation system that does not only feed this crop and the tree tomato with water, but also serve as an organic compost system to through the transformation of the pool and the sowe. They define it as a bioproductive chain of hyper-intensive production and agricultural innovation.

On the banks of the Patía River and under the constant surveillance of the sun, 14 prefabricated houses are erected that were built by the same community. With the help of a master worker, they made the plates, walls and places necessary to build their houses, after having to sleep for months in makeshift huts close to the coolness provided by the flow of fresh water. With the support of the UN, WFP, Pastoral Social and Paso Colombia, 48 ex-combatants are raising breeding sows, laying hens, Tahiti lemon, melon and vegetables.

The lemon trees are painting green a land that was left dry after indiscriminate logging and extensive cattle ranching that occurred in the area. There are 31 reincorporated people who take care of this crop and that of melon, for which they built a water reservoir that feeds from the river and with which they keep both the lemon trees and the melon trees hydrated. These fruits battle against a heat that has caused the working hours to go from very early in the morning until after noon.

Seeing the short-term needs for food and subsistence, they began to grow melon in several lots near the village. After 60 days of care, each plant sprouts at least three good-sized melons that already have a guaranteed sales chain, with a local supplier who distributes the fruit in nearby shops. They have been trained in its cultivation and continue to explore methods to get the most out of the land they have, which is why they have also planted bananas, cassava, tomatoes and cucumbers for community consumption.

Since they settled in the territory, they have had laying hens. First the bet was for the supply of the families of the reintegrated, but now it is of a commercial nature. They are adapting a shed to house 2,000 sheltered by huge trees that will provide shade and protection. Sometimes they are groped to feed a small group of breeding sows that they gave to the women for their production, so they have had to sell small piglets from a sow that has already given birth to be able to guarantee the necessary care and little by little reach your point of equilibrium. Thus, the sale of eggs is envisaged as a constant income to the reincorporated and their families, which gives them more stability over time, while their other production bets are paying off.

In this beautiful area of Cauca, 71 associates gave life to the Cooperativa Ecomún La Esperanza. And with the support of the UNDP and the peasant community with which they have established various forms of association, they saw the birth of one of the most sought-after coffees in La Paz. Café Sabor La Esperanza has been celebrated and distributed around the world and continues to be a symbol of reconciliation with the aroma of coffee.

Between 3 and 4 thousand kilos of La Esperanza Flavor Coffee are produced each month by ex-combatants and victims from Buenos Aires, Cauca. The altitude and climate in which it is grown give this coffee a characteristic caramelized flavor that has been awarded internationally as “the best cup” and “the best in the world.” Peasants from Toribio, Tacueyó and Corinto, who are suppliers of the grain, received the Ernesto III and Coffe 2019 quality award. Although for the ex-combatants what really gives value to their coffee, is the fact that in each grind there are the dreams and hopes of the reincorporated and peasants to be able to transform their reality based on resilience. Among their coffee crops, they are caring for more than 15 beehives for honey production, while at the same time combining the idea of contributing to the environment, cultivating with fruit trees, the coffee walnut, and an area of secondary forest.

In four fish production ponds, 46 signatories, 50 women farmers from AMAR and 15 farmers from ASCAMTA raise red tilapia, Nilotic tilapia and cachama, they remove four tons every two months. The air that comes down from the mountains billows as it opens the way for fish that grow under careful quality processes and at perfect times for distribution in the local market. They also have the production of four hectares of coffee, a beautiful project that they continue to consolidate with effort in a territory where, despite the constant threat, the peace signatories hope to put down roots of hope and reap a prosperous future for their families, their communities, and the new generations.

Economías Solidarias del Común (ECOMUN; Shared Social Economies) is a special organization of economic solidarity, created by Acuerdo de Paz (Peace Agreement), that currently unites 130 associations from across the country, working together in the process of reintegrating ex-guerrillas of the FARC and other communities.

They promote sustainable environmental activities that support living conditions fit for communities going through the process of reintegration, and consequently contribute to the regional development that allows the mitigation of the gap between the urban and the rural.

These associations develop projects in different sectors of the economy, such as agriculture, mining, industrial activities, housing construction, transportation, savings and credit, tourism, commerce, communications and education.

The Coalition serves as an intersection of diverse organizations composed of men and women going through the process of reintegration in the southwest and central region of the country, who come together to develop unique business, community and political ventures, to create spaces for combined work and planning as an alternative way to support reintegration commitments.

There, diverse initiatives converge, such as co-operatives, associations, corporations and national proposals, including ECOMUN, CNR-FARC, the FARC party, and the Memoria Viva (Living Memory) union, among others, that come bringing diverse proposals to the territories.

Additionally, a space of analysis and collective construction has been created, where delegates from the organizations periodically meet for the purpose of discussing and presenting their initiatives, the context they find themselves in and the difficulties they face, so that they can, in a co-operative way, think of solutions and develop plans that will reinforce the reintegration process and promote the construction of peace.

This environment stimulates the foundation of regional federations, uniting the diverse cooperatives and organizations into a legal entity that allows economic and community propositions to move forward in a coordinated way, such as the national fish farming project, driven by ECOMUN (Shared Social Economies / Economías Sociales del Común), and strengthen the diverse initiatives that are being developed in the territories.

In one of the most recent general assemblies, it was decided to support the establishment of a store selling products made by reintegrated persons in Bogotá as well as the exposition of a project of organizational reinforcement for the participating associations. In this way, the Coalition serves as a catalyzing axis in the economic, political and social aspects of the process of comprehensive reintegration; an initiative by which communal work, discussion and analysis are consolidated, and provides opportunities for the collaboration of organizations and social movements, who are provided with a setting to allow the promotion of peace and political participation in the territories.
