BACKGROUND

National Human Rights Commission’s Strategic Plan Support Project (SPSP) envisages to significantly contribute towards the institution’s long-term sustainability and its capability to further strengthen core capacity of National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) to protect and promote human rights. The project aims to develop human rights culture in Nepal and to enable people, especially minorities, women, and disadvantaged groups, to enjoy their rights, protected by rule of law.

The project targets to strengthen NHRC’s ability to effectively protect and promote human rights. The interventions aim to ensure that the rights of the deprived, marginalized and backward communities are promoted, and key stakeholders incorporate human rights into their day-to-day work and the NHRC itself is better networked, known, and respected by the public. With these interventions, the power and force of the NHRC will be significantly strengthened, which in the longer run will influence in organizational and management capacity of the NHRC where the NHRC can assume its full financial and organizational autonomy and influence the change in behavior of the Government, civil servants, armed forces, civil society and international community.
